History ~ A Moment in Time

There is no more clichéd name for a dog than Fido. So, how did Fido gain such a firm grasp in the American language that it went from a proper name to a generic name? The surprising two-word answer is Abraham Lincoln. It turns out that when Lincoln was a lawyer in Springfield, Illinois he had a dog named Fido.

According to canine historian, Stanley Coren, Fido was almost always with Lincoln, usually walking behind him carrying a package tied up with string. Frequently, Lincoln stopped at Billy's Barber Shop to get a haircut. Fido waited patiently outside where he became a frequent playmate for children passing by the shop. In a manner of speaking, Fido became Lincoln's furry, much loved mascot around town.

During Lincoln's first presidential run his political handlers worked hard to package this brilliant, ambitious lawyer as a "man of the people." They constructed the still-familiar Lincoln legend: living in a log cabin, splitting rails and being a self-taught candle-reading youth. To further enhance the image of Honest Abe they added Lincoln's loveable, floppy-eared dog, Fido to the growing, popular legend.

As Fido's owner became one of the most famous men in America, "Fido" caught on among dog owners and remained a popular name for generations to come. However, the name is so overworked people no longer name their dogs Fido. You will no longer find the name Fido on the "Most Popular Names for Dogs" lists.

Scout is much loved by his family in SC.

Semper Fidelis

The name Fido derives from a Latin word that means "to trust, believe, or confide in." Historian, Stanley Coren states, "It is equivalent to calling a dog Trusty or Faithful. It can be compared to the Marine motto, 'Semper Fidelis' ~ Always Faithful." It is highly probable that Lincoln became familiar with the meaning of the words while devouring books in preparation for his profession in law.
